How to grow Beets; and their culture and best management.

This is a leading vegetable in all gardens, and makes a valuable crop for the market gardener. I have learned from experience that the best soil for this vegetable is a very light and mellow loam, and never heavy, nor soggy. High fertility is always best. If none but heavy soil is to be used, it should be enriched with a heavy dressing of light, loosening manure. The ground must be thoroughly pulverized to considerable depth, or the beets will throw out too many side roots, or grow very crooked. Thorough culture must be given them. The seed should be sown in rows from one foot to eighteen inches or more apart, or a proper distance to be cultivated with a machine. From one to two inches is deep enough to cover the seed, and should be well pressed, or rolled. Sow five, to six pounds to the acre. Thin out to stand five, to eight inches in the rows. Market Gardeners bunch those which they pull out, and sell them for greens in markets, and to families, and realize a good profit. It is a healthful food for the human race, and should be used plentifully for a change in diet. The seed can be sown early as it is not liable to rot. If the early sorts will sell best in your markets, you can have a continuous supply by successive sowings. Those intended for late, and winter use should not be sown until June, or July in the northern states. They are liable to become woody if they remain in the ground too long after maturity. In storing for winter use, the leaves should all be trimmed off, and the roots packed closely in a very cool place in slightly moist soil, or in packing moss. Beets will keep very well when buried out of doors the same as potatoes, secure from frost. The long, and half-long varieties are popular for late fall and winter use, and the turnip shape varieties are good keepers if the seeds are sown the last of spring, or in early summer. Beets are quite free from injury by insects, and is a sure, and profitable crop. Every farmer should grow a good supply of Mangel Wurtzels to feed to stock. They make a valuable food in winter and spring. They should be cut or chopped into small pieces, and fed with a little salt sprinkled on them, and mixed with bran, or meal, or any ground grains for feeding. Mangels should be planted late, (June or July) in this latitude, and thinned to a stand of eight to ten inches apart, and farther if the soil is very rich, because they produce larger roots and leaves. They are often grown in private garden to feed the family cow.

Don't be deceived by the high sounding, and fictitious names which some seedsmen attach to common sorts and high prices, under pretense of new novelties. A reliable firm would not take such low method to get your money.

CABBAGE

The soil; cultivation; and how to make them a profitable crop.

This is one of the most valuable of all garden vegetables, and great care must be taken to get good solid heads. The difference in soil and climate has considerable influence in its variations. Varieties that head well in one locality, may not do so well in another. Every gardener should learn what varieties are in best demand in the market and select seeds for planting of those varieties which will sell in market to the best advantage. A light soil is favorable to early growth, and early maturity. Cabbage is a grass, and must be sown and raised in a very fertile soil. In order to get early cabbage, it is necessary to start them in hotbeds early enough to have good strong plants by the time the weather becomes suitable for setting them in open ground.

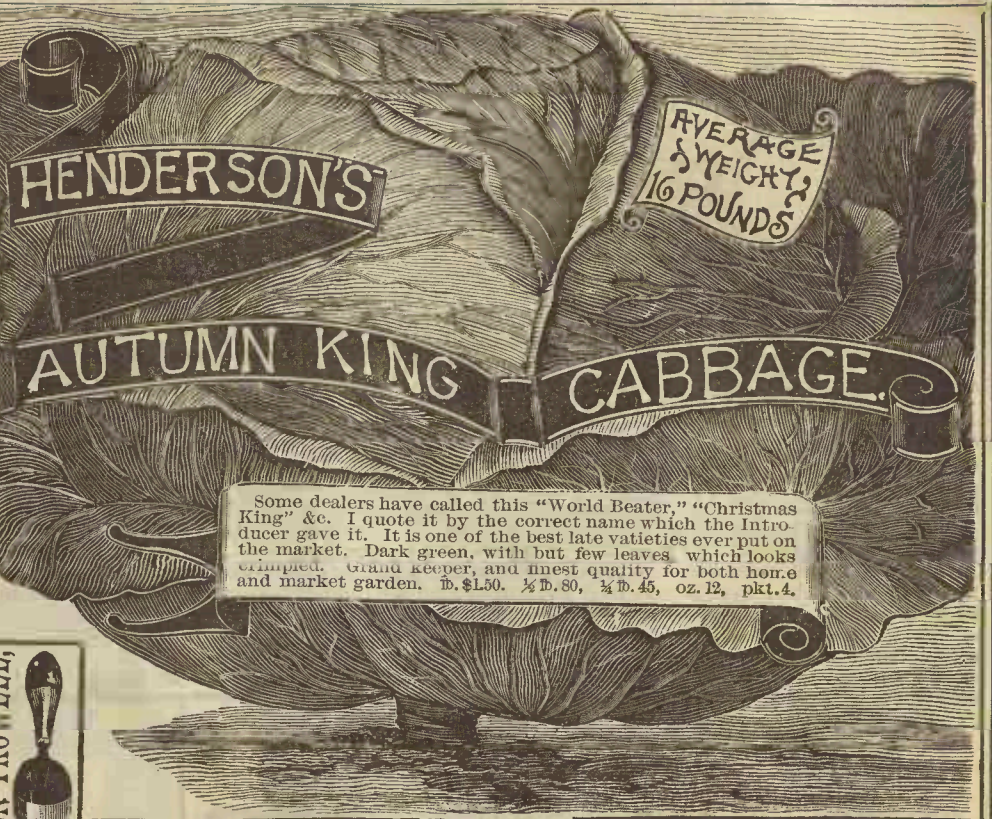

No definite time can be stated here, because the time for starting hotbeds must be adapted to the latitude, and climatic conditions. My customers are located in every section of this country, from Lake Superior, to the Gulf of Mexico. Late varieties can be planted in open ground when the ground is suitable, and transplant them to the fields after the earliest crops have been marketed. Set the early varieties in open ground as soon as the weather is suitable, and then follow with the second early sorts. Late varieties must not be set until late, because they come to maturity too early and burst. When such is the case I advise bending the cabbages over enough to loosen the roots, and check their rapid growth. When the earliest crops from the garden are cleared off in June and early July the ground can be set with late cabbage. A secret to success is; good thorough cultivation. If plants are troubled with the black flea, or the green fly, sprinkle with tobacco dust, or white hellebore. When the cabbage butterfly appears, sprinkle with a solution of paris green; half a teaspoonful to a pail of water, occasionally; until heads begin to form; this will put an end to them. If they appear later, sprinkle with tobacco dust, and black pepper; also pyrethrum powder, and kerosene emulsion. Cabbage is often kept successfully over winter by burying them very late, and adding covering as winter advances; closely to freezing.

CAULIFLOWER

Treatment of Cauliflower; and how they should be cared for.

The first starting of the plants, and immediate treatment thereafter is about the same as that for cabbage. They are very sensitive to checks, and unfavorable weather. The best results are obtained on very moist land and what is called a wet season. It has been found best to start the plants in a poor soil, and transplant them to a rich, and moist location. It prevents such serious check to the plants. The ground must be kept loose, and free from weeds. Cauliflower is very sensitive to extreme heat and dry weather, therefore it is best to give them a moist soil if possible. In the family garden they can be cared for easily by pouring a few quarts of water on each plant when the weather becomes too dry. When the heads, or curd becomes partly formed, it is beneficial to tie the leaves loosely over the top to exclude the hot rays of the sun. Give them a plentiful supply of water at that time if possible. Cauliflower is a very uncertain crop. A good, and satisfactory crop may be grown in a favorable season, and the next be almost a total failure. The only way to get cauliflower is to persevere and learn its requirements in your locality from thorough experience. My cauliflower is grown in Denmark, where all the best is obtained.

CARROTS

How to make Carrots produce a profit, and value to family.

Carrot will make a valuable crop for the gardeners, if it is given all the care it deserves. The small sorts can be grown successfully under glass; also the Early Long Forcing. Large varieties will do best in open ground. It requires from four to six pounds to the acre. Sow in rows a foot or more apart. When weeding, thin out to a stand of 3 to 4 inches apart. Sow in April and May in this latitude. If the soil is dry, it should be rolled, and pressed firmly and compact to insure germination, because it starts slowly. The best soil is deep sandy loam of natural richness, and stirred deep, and not too much manure, even if the land is poor. Several successional sowings should be made, so as to have them fresh for use during the whole season. They are valuable for use in soups; stews; salads; boiled dinners, and other savory cookery. They are a valuable, and healthful article of diet for the family, and profitable for market. It is a valuable food for stock. Store them for winter and spring use the same as other root crops. This crop requires close attention as the plants in their early stage of growth are weak, and spindling, and slow of growth, and special care must be taken to keep them free from weeds at the start. For late fall and winter use, it is best to sow the seed as late as June. Sow the seeds quite thickly, because a portion of the young and tender plants are liable to be scorched off by the sun in dry weather.

EARLY LONG FORCING CARROT

The only early long variety ever produced. Fine for early forcing; grows rapidly, and is firm in its texture, and gives a greater weight of roots than shorter sorts. lb. 80,  $\frac{1}{2}$  lb. 50,  $\frac{1}{4}$  lb. 30, oz. 10, pkt. 5.

CELERY

How to grow Celery. Its treatment from planting to blanch'ng.

Celery can be grown with less difficulty than many people suppose. It has become by far the most popular salad in the American market. It is in great demand at all times during the year. The seeds are very slow in germinating; requiring about three weeks, and the soil must be kept moist to the surface. The time for sowing the seed depends on the time it is desired for blanching. If required early, the seed can be started in the house, or greenhouse, or in hotbeds. If for later use it can be started in open ground, and transplanted when of suitable size. When six to eight inches high, the tops should be sheared off a little in order to strengthen the roots. Celery requires a great deal of moisture, and rich soil. When of suitable size for blanching it is found to be a good method to put boards on each side of the row, and the light can be better excluded by packing a little straw each side of the plants before placing the boards. The older method is to bank up with soil. The more water they receive, the better they will grow, and blanch more perfectly. Celery is not injured by serious fungi disease, and has no troublesome insect enemies.

Crawford's Half Dwarf CELERY. Vigorous growing, and surpasses many of the larger sorts, both in quality and rich nutty flavor. Blanches readily, and stalks are heavy. lb.$1, ½ lb.55, ¼ lb.30, oz.10, pkt.3.

This refers to Sweet Corn; how it can be successfully grown.
 Any good soil will produce Sweet Corn, but it will not bear as early planting as the field sorts. A rich, warm loam will produce the earliest corn. A secret in getting a supply ahead of others is to put a quantity between two sods, or in soil, and keep in a warm place, and when it is nicely sprouted, plant in open ground without danger of decay by bad weather. It can be hastened fully two weeks. I advise planting five, to seven kernels to the hill, and when well established, thin to three stalks to the hill. Make the hills three to four feet apart. The smaller sorts can be planted closer. The desirable qualities of each variety can be found in the regular list. Sweet Corn has always been a profitable crop for the industrious gardener who gives it good soil, and thorough culture. There is always a very good demand at reasonable prices, but the first-early supply is usually the most profitable, but a greater yield can be obtained from latest varieties. Sweet Corn is one of the richest and most profitable articles of food that can be grown for feeding to stock; especially valuable for cows, as it will produce a very bountiful flow of rich milk.

CUCUMBERS

Great value in Cucumbers for slicing; pickles, and market.

The Cucumber, like all other vine crop, should have a good soil. A newly broken field is best. If old worn ground must be used, it should be well fertilized, or a shovelfull of manure mixed well with the soil under each hill. Plant in hills, four feet apart, and put a dozen seeds in each hill, and if not all destroyed by cut worms and striped bugs, they can be thinned out to three or four plants to each hill. The best remedies for the ravages of all insects on vine crops, is a sifting of a little Paris Green, well mixed with flour; ashes; dust; or any very fine powder. Also: Tobacco dust is effective in many localities. A very early supply of cucumbers can be grown by planting a few seeds in small pieces of inverted sods and kept in a warm place until well established, and then set them into open ground, and they will be well ahead of insects. A little turpentine mixed with air-slacked lime is recommended to keep off insects. The cucumber is easily, and quickly grown, and is a paying crop in many localities. Any family can have plenty of pickles by keeping them in a salt brine, and a few days before they are required for use they can be freshened in water, and then put into vinegar. In a few days they would be ready to use. Some vine crops, and onions have been devastated by small worms, or maggots at the roots. If such ravages occur, turn a little strong tobacco water on every hill that shows a wilting plant.

A distinct, dark green variety, retaining its color until ripe. Skin is spineless, and fruit sets early and produces plentifully of long; smooth; handsome fruit. Is crisp; tender, and delicate flavor, and fine for slicing. Fine for forcing for market, and table.  $\frac{1}{2}$ B.25, oz.8, pkt.4.

LETTUCE

Lettuce is easily grown, and is a profitable garden crop.

Lettuce is the best known salad plant in this country. It makes a very profitable crop for the market gardener to grow in hotbeds, or the greenhouse during the winter and early spring. It commands a good price, and always in demand. It can be sown in open ground as early as the soil can be worked. Sow in rows twelve or more inches apart, and when the plants become well established, thin to an even stand; not too thick. In order to have a good, crisp, and tender lettuce, it must be grown on the best, and richest soil, as the crispness depends on the rapidity of growth. The ground cannot be too rich to bring it to perfection. In order to have a continuous supply during the whole season, a succession, or new sowing should be made every two or three weeks. It is so easily grown, and such a healthful salad that every family should have a supply. It is seldom troubled with any injurious insect enemies. A rich soil, and plenty of moisture will give it a crispness, and freshness, that cannot be equaled by any other salad. All the distinctive qualities of each variety can be found in the regular list, where each sort has a full description.

MUSK MELON

Melons can be made to pay; both for shipping, & home market. Musk Melons, like every other vine crop, delights in a warm sandy soil. The location, and soil, has a great influence in producing delicious quality and flavor. Thoroughly rotted fine manure should be put in each hill to produce a good yield. Plant liberally, in hills four to six feet apart each way, according to the variety. They cannot be planted in open ground until warm weather, but the seeds can be started in small pieces of inverted sods, and gain a week or two in crop. Thin out to three or four plants to each hill. Give good culture, and keep them free from weeds. A light warm soil is the most congenial for melons. If troubled by insects use the same remedy prescribed for cucumbers. If insects work on the roots, turn a small quantity of strong tobacco-water into each hill. The small or basket size melons are very popular for shipping, and the distinctive qualities, and usefulness, will be found in the description of each variety in the melon department. Large melons may sometimes sell best in the home, or local market, and it will be to the gardeners' advantage to ascertain what varieties their merchants and customers prefer.

WATER MELON

How to grow Water Melons to perfection, and to make money.

Water Melon seeds are planted in this latitude about the middle of May, or when the weather has become settled and warm. A warm soil, with southern exposure will produce the best results. Good melons usually has a solid; bright red flesh, and must have a strong protecting rind to be a good shipper. For the family, and home market, the other varieties are as desirable. A large quantity of manure is required in the soil is new or naturally very rich and warm. Seeds can be started early in small pieces of inverted sods, to get a few melons for earliest use. The vines occupy a considerable space, and the hills should be made six to eight feet apart each way, and if on rich, or highly manured ground, eight feet apart is not too far. Plant from four to six pounds to the acre, and thin to a stand of three or four good plants to each hill. I prefer to plant heavily in the first place rather than to replant if part of them should be destroyed by unfavorable weather, or other causes. Water Melons are seldom injured by ravages of insects, but cut-worms may be troublesome in some localities. (See cucumber for best insect remedies.) A good description of each variety can be found in the list of melons. Early; medium early, and medium size varieties are used in the north, and larger sorts in the middle, and southern states.

ONIONS

Scuffle Hoe.
Each by exp. 40c

The Onion crop is a profitable one, and seldom fails to pay.

This is one of the standard vegetables and a very sure crop to grow. The seed should be sown in rows twelve to fourteen inches apart, and thin out the plants to stand three to four inches apart in the rows. Use rich ground, and give thorough culture, and keep all weeds cleaned out. The best crops are produced on a well manured or very rich soil. If the crop is obstinate in maturing, it is advisable to start them early in cold-frames, or any secluded warm place, and transplant them into open ground as soon as the weather is suitable. Onions can be grown several years in the same soil if it is rich, as they do not show a requirement for rotation as many crops do. They delight in cool weather and high culture. Hot and dry weather checks their growth and causes them to ripen too soon. They keep best when stored in a shaded and well ventilated place, and in shallow crates. The onion crop is seldom infested with insects, nor fungus disease, unless it be on old weedy ground. If a crop becomes infested with the onion maggots at the roots, that field should be discarded and newer ground be devoted to them whenever it is possible to do so.

DON'T buy the little five cent packets of any such varieties as Corn, Peas, and Beans, which may be offered by many dealers, because sufficient to use, if much use cannot be sold for five cents and pay the postage, and the smallest gardens will require at least a half pint, and I believe much more of those sorts to realize any benefit. All seeds delivered, except wholesale.

PEAS

The proper soil; culture and, how to grow Peas successfully.

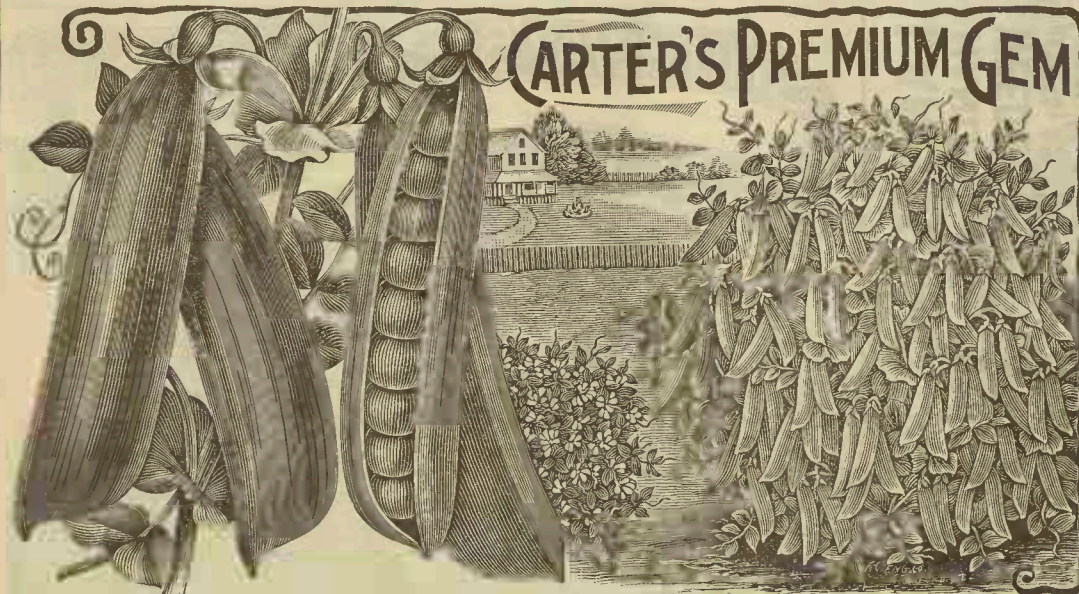

Peas will do well in any good garden soil. There is no product of the garden more popular and desirable than the pea. A moderately rich soil is preferable, and the smooth seed varieties can be planted as soon as the ground can be well worked. The wrinkled varieties are less hardy and will not bear so severe weather. They should not be sown until moderately warm as they sometimes rot if too cold and wet. The distance between the rows should depend on the system used in their cultivation. If a hand cultivator is used, fifteen to twenty inches will suffice, and wider if a horse cultivator is to be used. Plant about one inch deep, and drill the seed two to three inches apart in the row. Tall varieties require little more distance apart. A succession of sowings from earliest spring to August will give a continuous supply during summer and fall. They are a valuable, and healthful article of food. I have all of my peas grown on new soil, in northern Wisconsin and Michigan, near the great lakes. The cool, moist air keeps the pea weavels away from them. My stock of peas (three car loads) is without doubt, the best grown in this country.

A serious shortage in the crop of Peas and Beans will advance prices twenty five to fifty per cent above mine. I have a very good supply.

How to grow Peppers for market; Pickling-works; & Family.

Peppers require a rather long season of growth, and should be started in a greenhouse or hot-bed, or in the house, and set out in open ground when the weather becomes well settled and the ground quite warm. The small varieties will do very well when started in open ground. If the soil is light and sandy, and in a warm location, the larger varieties can be started outside. The plants should be set from eighteen inches, to two feet apart each way, and kept well cultivated. They are tropical plants, and delight in plenty of warmth and sunshine. Those large sweet, or mild varieties are used while in their green state, in soups, meat-stews, and for making stuffed or mango pickles. There is good market demand for green peppers at the stores every fall, and large quantities are used by the pickling-works in many localities. The sweet, and mild varieties are often sliced and eaten as a salad, with pepper and vinegar, or a little salt. The smaller varieties are very sharp and pungent, and are used to make pepper-sauce, and is mixed in with many sorts of pickles when a pungent taste is desired. A little is often mixed in chickens feed.

The kind of soil to use; how to plant, and all about Pumpkins.

Pumpkin seeds cannot be planted very early with any certainty of success. They delight in a good rich, warm soil, and they are rank feeders and are at their best in a warm, and moist soil. There cannot be too much sunshine for them. Their greatest value lies in their good feeding qualities for stock, but they are the delight of many families for making pies. The small varieties are the finest grained; sweetest, and best for family use. There is no easier crop to grow for feeding to stock, and it assists very much in helping along with the more solid foods. In their growth, the vines covers a wide space of ground, and therefore should be planted in hills a long distance apart but if planted nearer, thin out to only one or two good plants to each hill. They are rank and rapid growers, and are not troubled by insects to the extent that smaller growing vine crops are. If however, they are attacked by insects, use the same remedies that are recommended for them. Pumpkins are sold in the markets in large quantities every fall and are considered a very profitable crop. The large field and cheese varieties are very well known but not by any means the best quality. In my list of varieties will be found the distinctive qualities of each, and a description as to their size and shape, and much other information.

Sow moderately thick, and thin them to a stand two or three inches apart in the rows. In order to have them of excellent quality, they must be grown rapidly, and a good moist soil is absolutely necessary to produce satisfactory results. Quick cash returns can be had by growing Radish for market. After they are pulled and bunched for market the land can be utilized for other crops. Make a succession of sowings in a moist, secluded place so as to have a constant supply. The winter sorts are sown in July and August and make a magnificent growth during the cool fall months. How to plant, cultivate, proper soil, insecticides, and value.
 The necessary soil for this very valuable vegetable, is the same as required for all other vine crops. They are rank growers, and are at their best on rich soil, and during warm sunny days. In favorable weather they make a luxuriant, and vigorous growth. The summer, or bush varieties can be planted three feet apart, and the late sorts six to eight or more because they have very long vines. Plant plentiful in the hills and when the rough leaves are well started thin out to three, or four plants to the hill. If troubled by insects, use the same remedies prescribed for cucumber. The cut worm can be eradicated by thoroughly mixing a spoonfull of paris green in half pailfull of slightly moist bran, and drop a spoonfull on each hill at night. The worms will leave all other food and feast on the bran to their own destruction. The old fashion large sorts are sometimes grown successfully amongst corn, but are not liable to produce as satisfactory results as pumpkins do when grown in connection with other crops. Squashes sell well in every market, and they make one of the best, and healthiest of the culinary vegetables. A reference to my general list of squashes, will inform the reader as to the most desirable qualities of each.

All about Tomato, their uses and how they should be grown.
 The Tomato is not a rapid grower, therefore it must be started early in order to get the fruit in midsummer. Market Gardeners start them in hotbeds in March and have good size plants to set in open ground when the weather becomes suitable but for the family garden a few for first early can be started in boxes in the house and for later supply start them in a warm and sunny location in open ground, and transplant them when the weather becomes warm. Set the plants three to four feet apart, and water them well when transplanted, and when settled around each plant put an inch or two of loose soil around them to prevent baking and evaporation from soil, after the water has been poured on. If the soil is very rich I advise tying the plants to stake or trellis, to keep the vines off the ground. A sandy, or light soil is always preferable when it can be had. They make a valuable crop to grow for the market, and there is always a great demand and there is seldom an over-production. They sell well while in green stage for making pickles. They are a very healthful food, and every family can have a supply in winter, by canning them in the fall. They keep well in cans, or jars, and can be quickly prepared for table when needed.
